There are, however, no other studies on the effectiveness of a school bus intervention for preventing injuries to children. The only other study on this topic is a descriptive study of school bus accidents in the United States. The authors found that the majority of school bus accidents were caused by driver error, and that the most common type of accident was a collision with another vehicle. The authors also found that the majority of school bus accidents occurred on rural roads, and that the majority of school bus accidents occurred during the school year.
